A COMBINED WORD LIST

INTRODUCTION

ONE OF the major problems of the school is that of adapting teaching materials to the learner. A large part of this problem is the choosing for school books of a vocabulary which is within the word knowledge of the children who are to study those books. This cannot be done until we have found out the words of which the children in the various grades know the meanings.

The authors have been working for some years upon this problem of grade vocabularies, taking various steps toward its solution. The first of these steps was a piece of research called the Free-Association Study, involving over 20,000 children and 2,700,000 words of data, and resulting in tentative vocabulary lists for Grades II to VIII. The second step was a combination with this list of the other most important vocabulary studies that have been made. The results of these two steps are presented in this volume.

Other steps are being taken with the object of establishing definite graded vocabularies, the data being incorporated as secured in a Graded Word Book, which is now in temporary form. When it has been more fully tried out and tested, this book will also be published. Meanwhile it is hoped that the data in this Combined Word List will be of help to all workers in education who are interested in the problem of children's vocabulary. We shall now describe the origin of this list.

The Free-Association Study

The Free-Association Study was made possible by Ginn and Company, who subsidized it, and by the willing coöperation of numerous school superintendents, principals, and teachers, who realized the great educational value of the work. The purpose of this study was to determine as nearly as possible what words children know from grade to grade as they progress from Grade II through Grade VIII.

The Free-Association Method. When it was decided to make an extensive investigation of grade vocabularies, the problem at once arose, What type of original data should be secured? Previous studies had used oral or written compositions by children. This method has the great drawback of limiting the field of association within the children's minds. Even if many subjects are assigned, there can be no certainty that the many fields of children's experience have actually been covered. If, on the other hand, the children are allowed to choose their own subjects, their choice is certain to be controlled by school surroundings and other limiting suggestions. Furthermore, as soon as any subject is selected by a child, it restricts his association to a narrow field.

To overcome this difficulty the free-association method was employed, that is, the method of having the children write any words which came to their minds in a designated period,— in this case fifteen minutes. In this situation the suggestions of school surroundings, recent lessons, and the like also operate, but such sources are soon exhausted, and the train of associations wanders widely, with no limits save those of the child's entire experience. Of course, the wandering is in accordance with certain general principles. In any case, however, the pupil can and does range at will over the field of children's interests. The free-association method, seemed to have unusual merits for our purpose.

Another difficulty presented by the study of connected discourse, whether children's or adults', is the necessity of examining and scoring an enormous number of running words in order to secure a sufficient number of different words. Ayres says that the 300 commonest words make up 75 per cent, and the 1000 commonest words 90 per cent, of the words we write. It is clear, therefore, that the examination of compositions and printed pages involves a large amount of wasted labor.

The free-association method met this difficulty very well. When a child writes a free-association list he may fail to use any of the prepositions, articles, pronouns, and other common words that make up the bulk of written matter. Even if he does write some of them, he does not repeat them (except by inadvertence). Accordingly the words examined are, for any given child, practically "net." If a word has been used ten times, this comes very close to meaning that it was used by ten different pupils.

In the Free-Association Study an attempt was made to secure returns from various localities and from a sufficient number of children to neutralize, if possible, variations in individual environments. These conditions were obtained in large measure. For Grades III through VIII about half the data came from small towns in Illinois and the remainder from different sections of New York City and Brooklyn. The material for Grade II was also secured from these two parts of the country, but, in addition, part of our 4000 lists from the grade were written by children from various towns in New England. The work of 21,695 children in all was used in the study, giving a total of more than 2,400,000 words. These were distributed through the seven grades, beginning with Grade II, as shown by Table I.

TABLE I · Number of Words Written for the Free-Association Study

The free-association lists were written at the end of the school year. In consequence, children of each grade included words learned during that year. With data secured in this way, a Grade IV vocabulary, for instance, means, broadly speaking, words learned in Grade IV and therefore not known at the beginning of the fourth year. At the beginning of each year the child would be assumed to know the vocabulary of the previous years.

Rules for Tabulation. Since the children wrote down words in all sorts of forms, rules for tabulation had to be established. Those used by Thorndike and given in the introduction to A Teacher's Word Book <sup>1</sup> were the ones followed. These were:

"Except for special reasons, separate entries are not made of (1) plurals in s; (2) plurals where y is replaced by ies; (3) adverbs formed by adding ly; (4) comparatives and superlatives formed by adding er and est, or r and st; (5) verb forms in s, d, ed, and ing."

These rules practically mean that the regular inflectional forms were combined into one form for the noun (possessives of nouns were combined with the regular forms), one for the verb, and one for the adjective and adverb. Irregular inflectional forms were kept as separate entries.

A Combined Word List

Several classes of words included in A Teacher's Word Book were not recorded in this study. These were (1) proper names, (2) abbreviations, (3) contractions, and (4) archaic or poetic verb forms. It was felt that proper names present a distinct problem in themselves. Abbreviations and contractions are not different, except in form, from the words from which they are derived, nor are the archaic verb forms new words in the sense of involving new meanings. It may be pointed out that A Teacher's Word Book contains 1966 proper names, not including many cases in which the same spelling may also be a common noun. With this deduction A Teacher's Word Book contains not 20,000 words, but 18,034. To deduct the abbreviations and contractions would reduce the number to about 17,890.

Another important fact concerning the tabulation is that no frequencies were kept for words which appeared on the Kindergarten Union list.<sup>1</sup> It was felt that the placement of these words was sufficiently established as first grade, since they were the most common of 7000 different words found to be known to preschool children. The Kindergarten Union list as printed contains over 2500 words, but when it is reduced to a dictionary basis, and the types of words mentioned in the previous paragraph are eliminated, there is a total of 1759. These words were, of course, found on the free-association lists of the second grade, but they were not considered in our calculations of grade placement, because they were considered already placed.

Results in Grade II. In addition to the Kindergarten Union words just referred to, a total of 1889 words (dictionary basis and excluding the special classes referred to) were found on the free-association lists written by second-grade children.<sup>2</sup> These were distributed according to frequency as shown in the table on page 7.

The first step in determining grade vocabularies was to decide which of the 1889 words listed by second-grade children properly belonged in a vocabulary for Grade II. It was necessary to progress from the lowest grade upward, since the words which do not belong in Grade II naturally would be left to Grade III; those not suitable for Grade III would be left for Grade IV; and so on. Thus the list for each grade must be selected with due regard to the lists above and below it, and one cannot be changed without changing others. In fact, the relative size of the lists for each grade is the first problem that must be considered. Since the method used in deciding which words to place in Grade II illustrates the principles which were followed in this situation, it will be explained at length.

Size of Grade Vocabularies

When one has secured a long list of words used with certain frequencies by children of a particular grade, he does not yet have a vocabulary for that grade. He has still to decide what frequency of occurrence he shall accept as significant. He wishes to take the part of his list which has the greatest frequency, but he must draw a line somewhere between the frequency he will accept as satisfactory and that which he will consider insufficient. It is the point at which this line is drawn that decides, within the limits of the total list, the size of the resulting grade vocabulary. In deciding where to draw the line there must be recourse to judgment, but the judgment may be applied, as we shall see, in two distinctly different ways.

<sup>1</sup> These are in addition to 1759 words which appeared on these free-association lists, but which were already listed by the Kindergarten Union Study.

A Combined Word List

Vocabulary Development. The first way in which one may determine the size of a grade vocabulary to be selected from a word-count list is by a consideration of the probable vocabulary development of the average child. If we know approximately what size of vocabulary to expect, we can simply count down from the high end of the frequency list until we have included the assumed number of words. Our chief help at this point was a summary made by Thorndike of estimates of children's vocabularies.<sup>1</sup> Most of these estimates were secured by the dictionary-sampling method. For instance, an investigator might make up a list by taking every thousandth word in a dictionary, and then try this list on a group of children to see how many the average child of a certain grade might know. This average would then be multiplied by a thousand to give (in terms of the dictionary used) the size of the typical child's total vocabulary. Thorndike's summary of a number of these studies gives us our best evidence for judging how large a word list we may expect the average child of any particular grade to know.

Guided by the evidence just referred to, we may draw a curve of probable vocabulary development for the average child. Thorndike assures us that the eighth-grade end of the curve should be at about 10,000 words. Some of the studies indicate that the curve at the beginning of Grade I should start at 3000 words. The makers of the Kindergarten Union list have placed this point at about 2000. We may accept that figure as a conservative estimate, fully recognizing that many children of high intelligence and wide experience enter school with a vocabulary development one or two years ahead of their less favored fellows. Between these two extremes all seem to be agreed that the curve should be slightly concave upward, becoming steeper year by year. Further than this there is little that can be definitely said. Accordingly we have drawn a curve which may be considered a reasonable tentative picture of conditions. The yearly increments have been made in round numbers for the sake of simplicity, and because greater accuracy is impracticable the change has been made a fairly regular one.

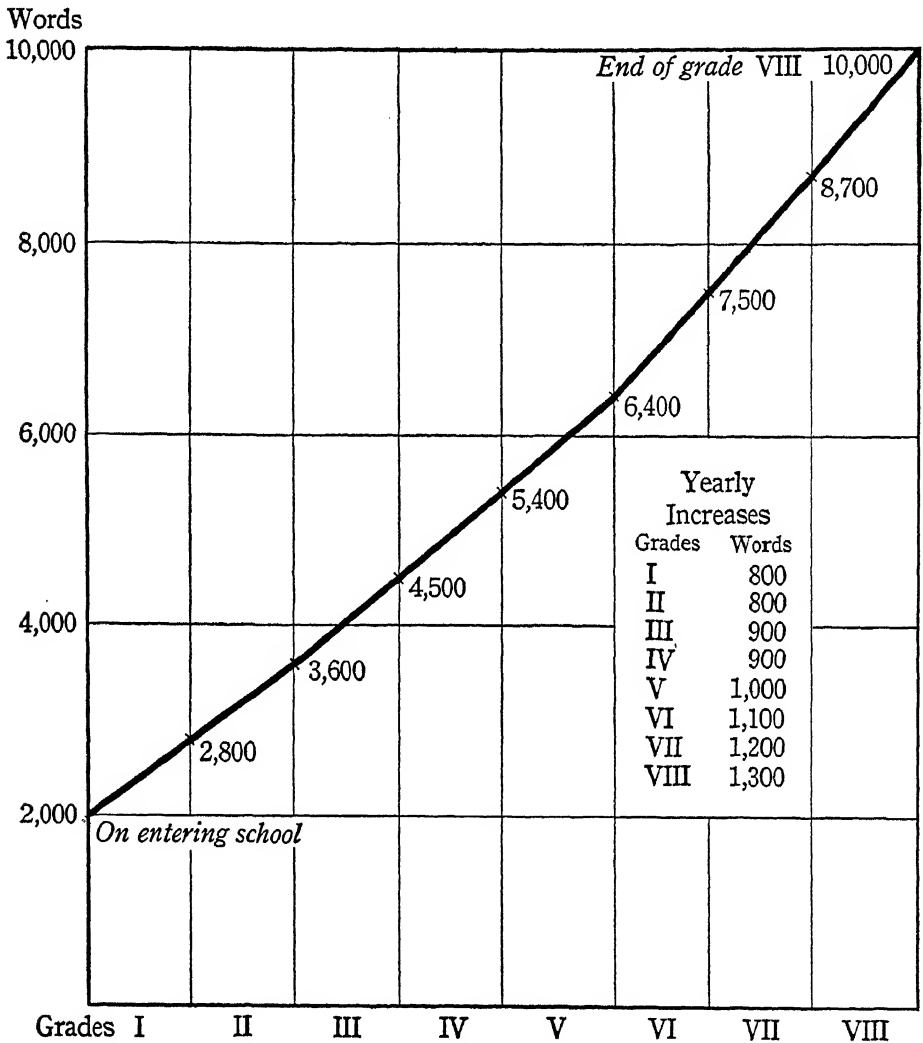

The figures for each year represent the total average vocabulary at the end of that year. The annual increase for any grade is easily secured by subtracting the total for the grade before. If we have the vocabulary used at the end of any year, we may decide which part of it belongs to that year alone only if we already have a vocabulary for the year below.

Introduction

Reasoning from probable vocabulary development, we see that at the end of the second year we might expect a total vocabulary of 3600 words, or 1600 more than the preschool vocabulary. Our Free-Association Study gave us a total of 1889 words used in Grade II in addition to the preschool vocabulary of the Kindergarten Union. However, we should not be justified in taking from our list of 1889 words the 1600 of highest frequency, because the Kindergarten Union list comes about 300 words short of the estimated preschool vocabulary. In addition, our list did not include all the words known to second-grade children. Though it was based on over 7000 free-association lists, many words otherwise known to be common failed to come to the minds of the children. For instance, most second-grade children certainly know what a bandage on a cut is, but no child wrote the word bandage. Therefore, even if we believe that a second-grade list (including the vocabulary of the first grade) should contain 1600 words, these cannot be arrived at by such simple methods.

A Combined Word List

Experience with Children. Another method of drawing the line in a list secured by word counting is to have qualified persons use their judgment, which is the result of their experience with children. Such judges may examine the list of words arranged according to frequency, and decide at about what point the words become unfamiliar to the average child of the grade in question. This method was employed in this study in addition to the analysis of vocabulary development just discussed. The words were arranged in frequency classes, and these were studied by the authors and their assistants. It was at once seen that to include all the words given only once on our list would bring in an immense number of words not known to most second-grade children. The group of words appearing twice also included too many words strange to Grade II. The group given three times still included some strange words, but most of the words seemed familiar to the second grade. Since we were accepting equal frequency as meaning equal word knowledge, we had to include either all of the group or none. Thus the inclusion of all words with a frequency of three seemed to present a truer picture of the case than to exclude all of them. Accordingly the line was drawn to include all words occurring three times or more. This gave a list of 984 words for Grade II in addition to the words in the Kindergarten Union list.

Incompleteness. It must be emphasized again that this second-grade list is a highly conservative one. Many of the words written only once or twice by second-grade children were very common words, such as pupil, repeat, thief, etc., but according to purely statistical methods they could not be included without including others in the same frequency group. To do this would have brought in a great number of uncommon words, such as forlorn, gorge, lobby, and the like. It is important that words known only to superior children should not be considered familiar to all. Accordingly we were compelled to make a list which was smaller than the true list, — smaller, that is, than a study of vocabulary development in general and of these words in particular would have justified.

First-Grade List. It is obvious from a consideration of grade-vocabulary development that some of the words listed for Grade II by the Free-Association Study belong in Grade I; in fact, probably half of them do, since they had presumably been learned during the first two years of school. Further studies are needed to determine which words are learned during Grade I.

Higher-Grade Lists. After the second-grade vocabulary had been selected in the way described, a frequency list was made of words used in Grade III which included words written in Grade II but not assigned to that grade. To this list the two tests just described were applied,— (1) probable vocabulary development and (2) experience with children in the grades. In this case there were lists from only 2208 children as against 7560 children in Grade II. Each of the 2208 children wrote more words, but the common words already assigned to Grades I and II appeared very frequently; hence there was less repetition of new words. When we came to study the frequency groups, the set of words occurring only once included too many words strange to Grade III, but the group with a frequency of two were predominantly familiar. A frequency of two or more was therefore accepted as satisfactory for placement. This gave a third-grade list of 863 words, — again a very conservative list.

This same process was repeated with each grade up through Grade VIII. Each time the words which had not been placed were included in the next grade above. Some words were moved up several grades before they secured enough repetition. In every grade above Grade II a frequency of two seemed to include the words which belonged in the grade and to keep out words which did not.

Resulting Grade Vocabularies. Out of all the words in the Free-Association Study, 2481 never appeared more than once and therefore were never placed in any of the seven grades studied. The remaining words, which were placed in the grade vocabularies, were distributed as shown by the following table. These words appear in the Combined Word List. They are in alphabetical order, each followed by the letter F and a figure giving the grade placement according to this particular study. The 1759 words found by the Free-Association Study but already placed by the Kindergarten Union Study are followed by the letters KU and not by F.

The Other Sources of the List

The Free-Association Study formed only one of the sources of the Combined Word List. Ten other word studies were also used. These do not include all the material that might have been found, but they do contain that which seems to be most important for our purpose. Three sorts are included: studies based on children's speech or writing, studies based on adults' letters, and studies based on reading matter. Some of the studies included more than one of these types of material.

Since the ultimate purpose was the establishment of grade vocabularies, the reader may wonder why material was taken from adult sources. The reason is that the gradings given by the researches into children's vocabularies could not be accepted as final because of the inevitable error of sampling and because of the presence, or lack, of suggestion made to the children by the ways in which the words had been secured. Consequently the frequency with which words were found in the writing of adults or in reading matter might help us to form a decision on the grade placement of many words. A further reason for the use of adult sources was that such sources were quite certain to fill in gaps that might be left by the studies based on children's speech or writing. Most, though by no means all, of the words which are common for adults are also known to children, and many of these had failed to appear on the lists derived only from the work of children. For these reasons the most important studies from all these fields of language use were combined. These studies are as follows :

1. "The Commonest Words in the Spoken Vocabulary of Children up to and including Six Years of Age," by Ernest Horn (the Twenty-Fourth Yearbook of the National Society for the Study of Education, Part I, Chapter VII, 1925).

This list includes words gathered from children's speech. The published list gives only 1082 out of the 5000 different forms found.

2. A Study of the Vocabulary of Children before Entering the First Grade, by the Child Study Committee of the International Kindergarten Union (The International Kindergarten Union, Washington, D. C., 1928).

Gives the 2500 words of greatest frequency from a list of 7000 different words secured by a combination of numerous studies of vocabulary of preschool children.

3. Free Association Study of Children's Vocabularies.

Appearing for the first time as part of the Combined Word List and described in the preceding pages.

4. A Concrete Investigation of the Material of English Spelling, by W. F. Jones (University of South Dakota, December, 1915).

A list drawn from themes written by children in Grades II to VIII inclusive on assigned subjects planned to cover their fields of experience.

5. A Survey of the Writing Vocabularies of Public School Children in Connecticut, by W. F. Tidyman (United States Bureau of Education Teacher's Leaflet No. 15, November, 1921).

"Spontaneous" compositions in Grades III to IX inclusive were the source of this list.

6. Common Essentials in Spelling, by C. K. Studley and Allison Ware (Chico, California, State Normal School, Bulletin No. 7, 1914).

Words found in children's "written school exercises" comprise this list. It also includes the Ayres list of 542 words, and was somehow checked with a list from adult letters. It was graded by usage with "modifications to correct manifest incongruities."

7. Payne-Garrison Speller, by Bruce R. Payne and S. C. Garrison (Rand McNally & Co., Chicago, 1931).

A list of 4661 words, graded "in terms of their frequency of use and difficulty," comprising the most frequent fourth of 13,496 different words (not counting names of persons and places) found in 2,175,000 running words from children's themes and letters, together with words of high frequency on other childhood vocabularies and on Horn's adult-writing vocabulary.

A Combined Word List

8. The New Orleans Public School Spelling List, by Nicholas Bauer (New Orleans, F. F. Hansel and Brothers, 1916).

The words of this list were taken from children's themes on ninety assigned subjects, which were intended to cover the life and activities of children. The list is graded not on the school status of the children but according to the frequency with which the words were used.

9. A Basic Writing Vocabulary, by Ernest Horn (University of Iowa Monographs in Education, First Series, No. 4, April 1, 1926).

This list includes the "10,000 words most commonly used in writing." It is based on 5,137,000 running words, exclusive of proper nouns, chiefly from adult correspondence.

10. A Reading Vocabulary for the Primary Grades, by A. I. Gates (Teachers College, Columbia University, New York, 1926).

This list is based on Thorndike's commonest 2500 words, a count of children's literature, Packer's vocabulary of ten first readers, and Horn's list (number 1 above). It is presumed to be for Grades I and II, but it is only partly based on use.

11. A Teacher's Word Book of 20,000 Words, by E. L. Thorndike (Teachers College, Columbia University, New York, 1931).

This list is derived from literature for children, — classics, textbooks, newspapers, magazines, correspondence, and a wide assortment of reference and technical books. The words are not graded.

The amount of data included by these studies is shown by Table IV. Columns 2 and 3 are not complete, because these items are not given by the authors of some of the lists. Attention is especially called to the last column, which shows the net total for each list after we had eliminated proper names and duplications; that is, after omitting proper names we reduced the list to what may be called a dictionary basis by combining inflectional forms. The two variations from this basis were that adverbs in -ly were combined with the adjectives, and that irregular forms of verbs were retained separately (the method of tabulation is described on pages 5 and 6). This reduction to a common basis changed the totals for some lists greatly. In the case of the Thorndike list the reduction is almost altogether due to omission of proper nouns, since Thorndike had used practically a dictionary basis in his compilation.

A glance at column 2, Running Words Studied, will show that a truly enormous amount of material was included. Column 3, which shows the number of different words, gives some interesting suggestions as to size of vocabularies. The Free-Association Study found 12,622 different words (dictionary basis) used by children of the elementary grades. The Payne-Garrison Study reports 13,496, but this total apparently includes derivatives, the omission of which would materially reduce the number. Bauer found 19,000, but this included both proper names and inflectional duplications, the omission of which would reduce the total to perhaps 15,000. In his study of adult writing, Horn found a total of 36,363 forms. If this total were reduced by omission of inflectional duplication to the same extent as his published list of 10,000 word forms, the total vocabulary based on adult use would amount to about 23,366 words. Thorndike reports 20,000 words which were found in his selected reading matter, but fails to tell us what was the total number of different words discovered. Since Grinstead found, in his count of a sampling of pages in the Encyclopædia Britannica, popular magazines, and textbooks, a total of 57,726 different words,<sup>1</sup> Thorndike should have found an even larger number. These figures are emphasized to show the very great spread of vocabulary, no matter what the material or level dealt with.

Comments upon the Combined Word List

The Combined Word List which follows presents the results of an enormous amount of study by experienced investigators. It should be useful as a guide in educational work in many ways; yet this list should in no sense be thought of as final, and to emphasize this fact we shall call attention to a number of limitations.

First, children's word knowledge is certain to change with changing life conditions, and consequently no tabulation can be considered final. Every year the world known to children expands in many directions. It expands geographically. With the use of the automobile, children are traveling about the country with their parents and are acquiring the vocabulary of travel, of camping, and of description of places in a way heretofore impossible. The children's world is expanding in the field of books, — books which they are learning to read more rapidly, with better understanding, and at an earlier age than ever before in the history of the schools. As a result more and more publications are appearing for children, and the types of reading matter formerly available only to adults are made accessible and attractive to them. The children's world is expanding technically. Adult trades and occupations, adult tools and machinery, adult knowledge of the world of things and of work; all are being brought closer to children or children are being taught something about them. Children are being initiated more and more into the world of adult ideas and relations. The moving picture and the radio are perhaps responsible for this more than any other agencies. In addition, the attitude of parents toward their children has changed, and there is less disposition to suppress the eager curiosity of childhood, and more readiness and ability to answer children's questions. All this expansion of the child's world means an expansion of the child's vocabulary. Therefore, just as encyclopedias and dictionaries need to be supplemented if they are to be kept up to date, so any word list will need to be added to and corrected.

Second, we must emphasize the presence of gaps in the list. There is some confusion, for example, concerning compound words. No list had bass drum, though this compound appears in some dictionaries. Evidently the studies may have listed the two parts separately. Since only one list contains the word bathtub, other lists may have recorded the parts separately. Thus many combinations may be thought of by some persons as compound words but as separate words by others, and there can consequently be no consistent treatment of compounds in statistical studies.

Aside from the problem of compounds, there are a surprising number of words which in some unaccountable way escaped all these investigators. In all the material combined, demoting of pupils did not appear. Coeducation was not spoken of. There was no colloquial language. There was no diacritical marking. Most difficulties of the eye seem to be mentioned except the commonest, astigmatism. In the extensive geography vocabulary the characteristic siesta of our South American neighbors is not included. In the treatment of disease and accident there was no use for hypodermic or pulmotor. Two of the commonest flavors of chewing gum, spearmint and wintergreen, are not included. There was no horehound candy. People ate neither tenderloin nor croquettes. Neither did they have succotash, slaw, lima beans, or endive. Not to multiply examples further, it should be evident that in spite of the efforts of the many separate investigators, and in spite of a combination of their findings, we still have a list which shows gaps that need to be discovered and filled in.

Third, because children's environment is not uniform throughout the country, we are hardly safe in saying that for every school in every place certain words are known to children. We need what might be called sectional vocabularies to supplement any general list. Let the general list tell us when the great bulk of children come to know certain words, and then let separate studies tell us which words are known earlier in certain localities because of special living conditions. Nautical terms, for instance, come rather late to most children in this country because they live away from the ocean. In seacoast towns, however, first-grade children have a large vocabulary dealing with ships and weather, sea life, fish, and other things with which they are in close contact. The greatest problem, however, is caused by sharp contrasts between city and country conditions. Children actually living on a farm have an intimate knowledge of many things which are not heard of by city children until years later. A general vocabulary should probably reflect city conditions, but just for that reason we should have a supplementary listing of words which the farm children learn earlier than the city children, if not also a list of the words they learn later.

Fourth, we must especially call attention to the great problem presented by this Combined Word List, the problem of correct grade placement. It will be found, probably to the surprise of many readers, that the combination of these word studies complicates rather than simplifies the problem. Throughout the word list it will be seen that the placements of the different studies often contradict one another instead of agreeing. The frequency studies, Thorndike and Horn, which show after T and H a particular thousand on these lists upon which the word appears, often disagree with each other and often fail to show high frequency when other studies show low grading, or low frequency when others show high grading.

Two causes operate to produce this widespread disagreement among statistical tabulations. First, it is obvious that if an investigator failed to catch a word at the grade at which it belonged, he was quite likely to catch it later in a higher grade, since children at any level continue to use the words of lower levels also. Second, many of these studies, especially those concerned with words for the sake of spelling, show small grade vocabularies. In this way words proper to a certain grade overflow, as it were, into lists for higher grades.

Fifth, a final criticism of the results here gathered from eleven different sources is that we are not told what meaning or meanings are implied by any entry. In some cases, as in such a word as carpenter, there is no question as to its meaning. In the case of the word car, however, we may have the meaning of automobile, streetcar, railroad car, or still others. To take a still broader word, such as care, we have even greater doubt as to what is meant. In the Free-Association Study, in which children wrote merely lists of word forms, there was no way of telling the meaning intended. In those cases, however, in which the words were taken from ordinary written or printed matter the opportunity was at hand to record the meaning intended. Although it is true that some investigators had no particular reason for doing this, since they were thinking only of spelling, it is nevertheless strange that some who were interested in words as words, and not as forms to be spelled, did not record meanings.

The criticisms here made of the Combined Word List point to further study that needs to be undertaken and that is, in fact, now being carried on in connection with the Graded Word Book, as mentioned on page 3. They do not, however, lessen the importance of the data that the list presents. The results of eleven careful and extensive investigations are here assembled, giving us information as to the grading or the frequency of use of 19,000 words. Of this total, over 10,000 are given grade placement according to children's usage by one or more studies. From this beginning the study of children's vocabulary can go forward more intelligently and more effectively than before.

Meaning of Symbols Used

Each of the words in the following list is followed by symbols telling upon which of the contributing lists it appeared. The names and sources of the contributing lists are given in detail on pages 13-14. The following table gives the symbol used for each source.

SYMBOL	CHILDREN'S SPEECH AND WRITING
H	Horn's Vocabulary of Six-year-olds
KU	Kindergarten Union List
F	Free-Association Study (Buckingham-Dolch)
J	Jones
Ty	Tidyman
W	Studley-Ware
P	Payne-Garrison
B	Bauer
	ADULT WRITING
H (plus a figure)	Horn's Adult Writing Vocabulary
	READING MATTER
G	Gates
T	Thorndike

A Combined Word List

Figures after the symbols tell in which grade the word was found with the frequency satisfactory to the author, with the following exceptions :

1. Words followed by H or by KU were used by children six years of age and younger, or at least before entering school. These may be considered as undoubtedly known to first-grade children.
2. Figures after H and T indicate thousands in the Horn Writing Vocabulary and the Thorndike Word Book respectively. The H which indicates the Horn preschool vocabulary is not followed by any figure.

After each word the symbols are placed in the order in which they are listed in the table above, except that the Horn Writing Vocabulary symbol appears last, in order to bring together the two symbols which are followed by figures that indicate frequency by thousands and that do not show grade placement.

The labor involved in reducing the various lists to the same basis of form and spelling would not have resulted in a corresponding increase in the usefulness of the Combined Word List. The words have therefore been taken without editing from the lists as published.
